Excerpt: .dear Garth, just fancy, as he says, wandering about in the dark, in a strange place. Garth, I wonder what they are saying at home. Oh, you dear old Dene. Shall we ever see you again? Hush! said Garth, for Cecil s tears stood thickly in his eyes. Yes, we will go to this man s place to-night. Garth longed to put his arm round his brother and comfort him, but he knew a sympathetic word would be more than the latter could bear just then. Touching the man s paper, Garth told him they had decided to accept his offer. Very well, he replied. You ve got a bit of a box, haven t you? Where is it? In the luggage van? Well, we ve got a goodish way to go yet. Is the box too heavy for me to carry, do you...
