Excerpt from Extracts From an Oration Delivered Before the Authorities of the City of Boston: July 4, 1845 The horrors of these redden every page of history; while, to the disgrace of humanity, the historian has rarely applied to their brutal authors the Com. Demnation they deserve. A popular writer, in our own day, dazzled by those false ideas of greatness at which reason and christianity blush, does not hesi tate to dwell on them with terms of rapture and eulogy. At Tarragona, above six thousand human beings, almost all defenceless, men and women, grey hairs and infant innocence, attractive youth and wrinkled age, were butchered by the infuriated troops in one night, and the morning sun rose upon a city whose streets and houses were inundated with blood. And yet this is called a glorious exploit. This was a conquest by the French. At a later day Ciudad Rodrigo was stormed by the British, when there ensued in the license of victory, a frightful scene of plunder and violence, while shouts and screams on all sides fearfully intermingled with the groans of the wounded. The churches were desecrated, the cellars of wine and spirits were pillaged; firewas wantonly applied to different parts of the city; and brutal intoxicationspread in every direction. It was only when the drunken men dropped lfrima excess or fell asleep, that any degree of order Was restored, andryeti t-pia stormmg of Ciudad Rodrigo is pronounced one of the most brilliant exploits cf the British army. This exploit was followed by the storming of Bad-a?oat, in which the same scenes were enacted again with added atrocities. let the story be told in the words of -a partial historian: Shameless...
