Brand New Book  Print on Demand .In-chu knows not why, only that her heart beats strongly whenever the paths of these two strangers meet. Even now, In-chu is totally unaware of the fact that the new heart beating inside her is in fact that of Teddy s lost lover, a human descended from the primordial union of the ancient Hawaiian Fire Goddess Pele and Kanaloa, the legendary God of the Seas. With a warm smile on her face, In-chu reaches out for Teddy s hand while navigating the narrow stone steps back to the Koi pond all the while looking lovingly into his open eyes. Slowly she takes a small step forward and gives Teddy a soft kiss on the cheek. There, in the stillness of the pond, oblivious to the passers by, the faces of the two lost lovers glimmer with the sun s reflection as they peer into Pele s Pond. Together, arm in arm they slowly walk across the old bridge from the foot of the Byodo Temple towards the flourishing garden. Do you mind if we stop by and pay my respects to someone up on the hill that is very special to me? asks Inchu. Of course not. there is someone up there I come to visit every Sunday too, mentions Teddy gazing towards his father s plot. Here she is. Without her I probably wouldn t be around today, says Inchu as she places the wild flower atop the grave. Teddy s eyes shudder in a cold stare as he notices the engraving on the granite headstone - it reads. Forever loved and missed by all who knew and cherished her. Lois Makanamai Ho. Teddy falls to his...
