Jessica Kingsley Publishers. Hardback. Book Condition: new. BRAND NEW, Narrative Identities: Psychologists Engaged in Self-Construction, George Yancy, Susan Hadley, " I can imagine that convincing psychologists to put pen to paper to construct narratives of their own lives, revealing stories about significant influences in their personal and professional identities was no easy feat. Yancy and Hadley have done just this, and their edited book offers a fascinating way to gain greater insight into the theoretical ideas of key psychologists through their self-construction." - Psychologist 'There is much to be inspired by, to reflect upon, to learn from, and to understand from a thorough reading of this book.' - Nordic Journal of Music Therapy 'A collection of papers in which psychologists from assorted theoretical orientations take part in an exercise to discover how they came to be the 'particular epistemic agents they have become'. Their conceptions of self hood are examined through the lens of the theoretical presuppositions used in their daily work. These include narrative, feminist, social constructionist, postmodernist, hermeneutic, critical, poststructuralist, humanistic, and psychoanalytical therapeutic approaches'. - Book News 'What a fascinating and illuminating work! Yancy and Hadley have succeeded in stimulating a group of accomplished narratologists in psychology.to deliberate on the ways in which their life experiences are related to their scholarly explorations of narrative.
