Excerpt from Garden Sauce: A Poem, Delivered at the Twenty-Fifth Anniversary of the West Newbury Farmers Club, Dec; 15th, 1881 Garden Sance Prologue, My friends, at least six thousand years ago, - I say at least, because chronologists do differ so In casting up the sum of various stages That make the total of the vanished ages, - A taste for fruit entailed upon us work and woe. Not that the two synonymous must be On all occasions, for we sometimes see, Among the rest, a worthy friend or neighbor, Who really seems to love to labor, Without the stimulation of a fee. But, on the whole, our race has grumbled, as a rule, To think our first maternal should have been the tool Of such a devil, sore and unforgiving, As he who forced humanity to earn its living: With all respect to sex. she must have been a fool!
