CHAPTER VIII FROM BOSCASTLE TO MILFORD I Left Boscastle on the s1st of July, at 5. 30 A. m. , bound for Lundy Island. The breeze was very fresh off the land, and came down in sharp squalls; the pilots advised me to keep quite close along the land, so as to cheat the tide. They were going to examine their fishing nets and lines just off the Beeny Sisters, consequently we sailed together that distance, and I kept close in-shore; but afterwards I steered out, in spite of the tide, for I found the winds eddy in the most perplexing manner, being at one moment south-east, and the next deflected by Sharpnose Head and the line of cliff to about north-east, which was, of course, slap in my teeth. I lost at least two hours of a fine breeze by hugging the shore,...
