Now dismal destruction hangs over black walls, Or meets at the corners of streets; The shroud of His vengeance, like a funeral pall, Crimes merited punishment meets, Where the spoiler doth prowl, mong the bats and the owls, Their vigils with hootings to keep. Destruction had bred in their hot, humid homes. And still echoes a lingering wail From tortures then inflicted on innocent ones, Ere justice and judgment prevailed. Now serpents twine among bones, or coil within domes That had handl d the cat- o-nine tails. Four dark, dismal journeys in chaos round the sun Had traveled the night-stricken world; O er a thousand dark nights seem d centered in one, While the flames of His judgment upcurl d, When light seem d to come, and His judgments were done; When the bolts of His wrath were thus hurl d. Those bolts from His lightning, from judgments on high, Have cleft the political clouds; While stars shine brightly in the political sky, Are dispelling the pall which enshrouds; And slavery did die with a shriek and a sigh, And traitors no longer were proud. Other stars in the army of freedom do shine, As the light of the morning now nears; Now a sight most sublime and light to mankind, A bright constellation appears; For the beacons of time to illumine the mind, And drive away liberty's fears. THE NATION'S DAY. A change comes...
