Some Empirical Tests in Vocational Selection, Vol. 49 (Classic Reprint) (Paperback)

By Herbert Wesley Rogers

Forgotten Books, United States, 2015. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****. Excerpt from Some Empirical Tests in Vocational Selection, Vol. 49 A. Tests for typists. Lahy (32), reports an experiment made with eleven typists as subjects; six women who had had from two to four years practice, and five men who had had from two to eight years practice, in typing. Measures of the following functions or processes were obtained; muscular sensibility of the two hands, speed of auditory reactions, memory for numbers and sentences, attention, and several higher processes such as imagination, abstraction, judgment and reasoning. In comparing the three good and the three mediocre women subjects it was found that the former possessed a finer threshold of tactile and muscular discrimination, a tendency of the hands to become equally strong, a better memory, fewer errors of attention, but showed longer auditory reaction times. In comparing the men subjects the same distinctions were found. This is an interesting and valuable contribution in that it stimulates work along these lines and blazes the trail, but it has not been worked out extensively enough to be practically applicable. Lough (35) reports graphical curves...
