C. C IN an age When every innocent amusement should be devised to stem the torrent of that awful fascination, which attends card parties and card playing, it seems to need no apology for the publication of a little volume calculated harmlessly to allure to peaceful thoughts and blissful moments. It has long been felt by tile initiated, that there is much consolation in the astral art, and in the contemplation of those starry orbs, with a reference to our future immortality and state of blessedness; and it is confessed that the approbation of the public on a former.
