Catapulted into the jet and space age, confronted with fantastically expanded horizons, he can no longer think in terms of national boundaries or natural barriers. Rather, he must think on a scale of global involvement and interdependency. The mutual exchange of students between nations is a vital part of any program to attain world peace through better understanding, to distribute technical knowledge from developed to underdeveloped countries, to share more equitably the world's social and economic bounty, and to promote an exchange of information and ideas. These goals can be ignored only at our peril. They must be met with a sense of compelling urgency. As Americans, we have been so preoccupied for so many decades with developing our own land and with solving our own national problems that we have neglected the study of other...
