But, fortunately for the rail roads, the Commission will not have to pass upon hundreds of individual rate advances, a task which might consume years, - but upon collective advances. If factors of capitalization and physical value were to be considered; if the Commission had to decide on the merits of individual rates as justified, on the one hand for the impoverished Erie Railroad, or, on the other, for the opulent Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, the outlook would be a sad one for the railroads, which began their increased wage schedules, as a rule, on June 1. The far more simple question, whether the increased cost of supplies and the larger pay of their employees justify the railroads in increasing certain class rates, should easily be decided in a very few months. It is by no means to be taken for granted that the railroads have no good ground for their demands. Their position will have fair treatment both by the Commission and also by the intelligent public.
