This publication may be worth purchasing. I am quite late in start reading this one, but better then never. It is extremely difficult to leave it before concluding, once you begin to read the book.

BY far the most important question of our time, to those who take more than a superficial or transitory interest in social matters, is the question of limitation of families. Since the year 1876 when Mr. Charles Bradlaugh and Mrs. Annie Besant were prosecuted for publishing The Fruits of Philosophy, in which practical information concerning the means of limitation was given, the birth-rate in practically all civilized countries has rapidly declined, although it was rising before that date. This fact, combined with the inquiry made by the Fabian Society in 1905, and the testimony of many medical men, renders it beyond doubt that this fall of the birth-rate is not only due to the voluntary restriction of families within marriage, but also to the employment of means of preventing conception which do not otherwise interfere with the sexual life of the parents. That the fall of the birth-rate is due to restriction of families is practically proved by the record of the fertility of married women, which has fallen from 292.5 births per thousand married women in 1870-72 to 209.4 per thousand in 1909 in England and Wales, and similarly in other countries. Another strong piece of evidence against this being due to what is sometimes termed moral restraint from intercourse by married people is that it did not occur before 1876, although the necessity for restriction of families and the advice of moral restraint had been most strongly before the public ever since the commencement of last century.
