Not illustrated. 1904 Excerpt: . way as has been done here, this time using his own values of  $T_0$ . If he had in this second step again used Damoiseau's values he would evidently have reproduced Damoiseau's eccentricities. Now the values of  $kt$  and  $k$  for 1850, derived in this way, evidently have no right to be considered as equivalent to an observed result. Therefore Souillart's values of  $e_x$ ,  $\tau_2$ ,  $e_r$ , and  $\tau_2$  have no weight whatever, and for the satellites III and IV also Damoiseau's values are to be preferred to Souillart's. It is interesting to notice that an own eccentricity of satellite II, of nearly the same amount as is found here, has already been suspected by Damoiseau, whose estimate is 0 00033. (See his remark quoted by Souillart from the Mmoire Manuscrit, Souillart II, page 28). As to satellite I, only two of the six observed values of  $i$  and  $kl$  exceed twice their probable errors, and both of these are smaller than three times their p. e. Further the apparent equations of the centre implied by the observed values are absolutely irreconcilable with the theoretical motion of the perijove. I) The values of  $\tau_y$  affected by the error in Tisserand (see the first footnote to page 84) were used in this computation. These did on the whole differ more from those of system I than the correct There is thus no evidence of an appreciable own eccentricity of this satellite. As the...
