Not illustrated. 1897 Excerpt: . . . doing so, if the object is to obtain reduced curvature through the frogs. The difficulty experienced in putting in a three-throw is to find the position of the point of the crotch frog. This can be done practically in this manner: Having first set both main frogs and given good line to both outside rails, or as they will be when the three-throw is completed, each of which should be the gauge of the track distant from the crotch frog, find with a tape-line the point between the gauge lines of these two outer rails just lined, where the distance is equal to twice the gauge; at this point place the point of the crotch frog. Or, having lined the outside rails, as just indicated, use a frog-board, moving it to the point where it will gauge neatly with both outside rails, with perhaps slight adjusting...
