The parts of the flower are very regular and are all in fives. Fig. 1, shows a flower of the natural size and the same flower cut lengthwise through the centre is represented in fig. 2. The calyx consists of five green sepals; the petals are large, of a fine purplish blue color, and fall very soon after the flower opens. Within the petals are five stamens which surround the pistil, which consists of an ovary and five separate styles. Figure 3 shows the pistil surrounded by the stamens, and fig. 4 gives the pistil by itself with a stamen by its side, the figures being in both cases much enlarged. The ovary, or lower part of the pistil in ripening becomes the seed vessel, or boll. As it matures, the styles fall away, leaving then remains as a...
