When it goes to seed there comes up one stalk in the middle of the plant, six or eight inches high. It bears the seed on the top of the stalk in a small round bud. Take this, root and branch, pound it soft, apply it to the tumor for a poultice or salve, and let the patient drink a tea made of the same for a constant drink. If the tumor is broken open, simmer the root and leaf in sweet oil and mutton tallow; strain it off, and add to it beeswax and rosin, till hard enough for a salve. Wash the sore with liquor made of the herb boiled, and...
