At five o clock the next morning, the expedition left the inn-door by the road that leads to Enniskillen on the north shore of the lake. Although there were but four individuals composing it--namely, the Parson, the Captain, M Gowan, and Slievan-- yet, by the advice of the Parson, both cars were put into requisition, for the sake of greater speed as well as greater comfort; it having been previously ascertained that the Squire intended to study the philosophy of fishing among the home throws, and to keep the Scholar with him. The Captain, who evinced a strong desire to be in two places at once, had been down to the river, casting a wistful look at the water; but as it was still hopelessly stained, and had run off much less than had been expected, he came back with an air of content and decision, as if he had succeeded in...
