Excerpt from Character Analysis by the Observational Method: Lesson XVIII, Marital and Family Relations; Lesson XIX, Character Analysis in Salesmanship; Lesson XX, Vocational Guidance. When my friend B. first met little Flossie S. he thought her light-hearted cheerfulness the most charming of all her lovable qualities. B. was broad-shouldered, substantial, dark of hair, eyes and complexion. His life had been a battle. He had won success rather late, after much hardship and by virtue of terrific energy backed up by a spirit that would never admit defeat. Sober, sensible, neat, methodical, serious, economical, merciless toward himself and others, B. felt the tension of life relax and its oppressive solemnity lighten in the sunshine of Flossie's happy, carefree nature. Flossie on her part looked up to B., admired him tremendously for his strength and virile force, for his success, for his steadfastness, and for his courage. Here was someone upon whom she could lean, someone with the wisdom and the bravery to assume the burdens of life, to solve its problems and to provide its necessities and luxuries.
