Excerpt from Practical Compendium of the Diseases of the Skin: Including a Particular Consideration of the More Frequent and Intractable Forms of These Affections; With Cases. III. Bullae or blebs, also distinguished by the effusion of a quantity of serous fluid under the cuticle, but to a much greater amount than occurs in the vesicular diseases. Blebs, indeed, are true blisters, and are to be closely stimulated by the application of cantharides to the skin. They commonly end in the formation of a circumscribed scab of varying thickness, and frequently very singular shape. The two principal genera of this order are pemphigus and rupia. IV. Pustules. Pustules are characterised by the formation or effusion of matter, either on the surface, or into the substance of the true skin. Pustules are followed by scabs of various kinds, sometimes hard and horny, at other times friable and pulverulent, which commonly cover indurations, excoriations, and even ulcers. Several principal of this order are reckoned variola, (including the different varieties of varioloid, varicella, or chicken pox,) vaccina or cow pox, acne or stone pox, mentagra, ecthyma, impetigo or running tetter, and favus. V. Papulae are small, firm, and solid elevations, containing no fluid in their centre, which are generally attended with itching of the most violent description. These end in resolution with desquamation of the cuticle. They only seem to ulcerate and present scabs when they are lacerated by scratching. Three principal genera belong to this order: strophulus, the red gum, the white gum, and tooth rash of nurses, lichen, and prurigo.
