Not illustrated. 1916 Excerpt: . what income should have been received, and all receipts should be analyzed for distribution as between principal and income. Payments should be verified in detail in the usual manner and the distribution between principal and income carefully inquired into. The trustees commissions should be checked to avoid double commissions. The manner in which the cash is handled should be investigated, in order that the estate may benefit from the interest on cash balances which should be on hand. All securities and bank accounts should be carried in the name of all the trustees as trustees of the estate. Assets and liabilities at the close of the period should be verified in the usual manner. As to assets, care should be taken that the converted assets are legal investments in that state. Acting in behalf of the beneficiaries, the auditor should also note whether investments are being made in such a manner as to give the beneficiaries the income they are entitled to, or whether the investments are of such a character that the benefits therefrom will accrue principally in the future to the remainderman. The form in which the accounts are submitted would depend first on whether the probate court has prescribed any particular form, and second, on the character of the estate. Where no specific form is prescribed, a method commonly used is to submit the following: 1. A comparative balance sheet as of the beginning and close of the period, together with the increases...
