Excerpt from Catalogue, Prang's War Pictures: Aquarelle Facsimile Prints The picture representing this memorable scene is most accurate in its details, and impressive in its composition and its action. In the centre foreground the little Monitor is seen circling around her unwieldy but powerful antagonist, whose riddled smoke stack, belching volumes of black smoke, is charging the whole atmosphere with threatening clouds, between which, like under a half-raised curtain, the dramatic and terrific battle-scene is enacted. The torn and battered sides of the Merrimac are evidence of the destructive accuracy of the fire from the revolving turret of its little adversary, which, like David of old, brought down the feared Goliath, never to rise again.
